ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

"A Runaway Wife" to be Given To night at Popular Prices.

The Louise Aydelle Comedy Company will appear at the Academy of Music tonight in McKee Rankin's romantic drama, "The Runaway Wife." This is one of the most interesting plays ever given in this city, and, although the company that produces it is one of the oldest and strongest on the road, Manager Hooper has induced them to favor Roanoke with popular prices. The charges for to-night will be 25, 35 and 50 cents, in addition to which a special ladies' ticket will be sold for 25 cents, which is good for a reserved seat if accompanied by a gentleman with a 50 cent ticket.

The company includes a number of high class specialty stars, and the leading actress, Miss Aydelle, is one of the most versatile and beautiful women on the American stage. To-morrow night the same company will give the charming farce comedy, "A Trip to a Circus." Patrons of the Academy will bear in mind that in these two plays they will see high-class productions at popular prices.

"Julius Caesar"

An audience that occupied nearly every seat in the new Academy assembled there last evening to witness the production of "Julius Caesar" by Charles B. Hanford, Ellihu R. Spencer and Miss Nora O'Brien.

The audience was treated to one of the finest performances of Shakespearean drama ever witnessed here. Mr. Hanford has surrounded himself with a company of capable actors, and an even and well-balanced entertainment results. Much has been expected of Mr.
Hanford, who appears as a star for the first time this season, and he did not disappoint those who were acquainted with his ability.

It was not until the scene in the senate with the conspirators was reached last evening that he had any opportunity to reveal his powers. His impassioned monologue over Caesar's body in the senate chamber aroused the house and brought him twice before the curtain.
In the great oration in the market place he again thrilled his audience, which called him thrice before the curtain and showered applause on him. It would be difficult to conceive of a finer portrayal of the role of Antony.

E. R. Spencer, as the "lean and hungry" Cassius, was very successful in realizing the character, his impersonation being marked by a vivid intimation that impressed all and won for him merited applause. Bennett Matlack, as Brutus, sustained his reputation in Shakespearean parts. The subordinate roles were satisfactorily filled, and as a whole the production has fixed a standard here that will not soon be forgotten.
—Norfolk Virginian, October 18.

Manager Hooper hopes that this attraction will be patronized, as he lost money on his last good attraction.

MAJ. JAMES BARBOUR DEAD.

An Ex-Confederate Soldier and a Prominent Politician Passes Away.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29.—A special to the Post from Culpepper, Va., says: Hon.
James Barbour, of Virginia, died at 6 o'clock this afternoon at his country home, Clover Hill, about three miles from here, of pneumonia, which attacked him last Saturday. His life-long associate, Dr. Robert S. Lewis, was called in to attend him. His physicians had hopes of his recovery, but Major Barbour sank so rapidly with the progress of his malady that when his death was announced it was a great shock and sudden surprise.

Mr. Barbour was a lawyer by profession. He was a brother of United States Senator John S. Barbour, and himself prominent in politics. In 1850, when but 25 years of age, he was elected to the Virginia State convention, that had for its duty the changing and amending of the State constitution. He was repeatedly elected to the State legislature, and was a member of that body at the time Virginia seceded from the Union.

He was opposed to secession, but when Virginia went out of the Union he followed his State. Entering the army he became a member of General Ewell's staff with the rank of major and adjutant. Conspicuous among the engagements he was in were Cross Keys and Port Republic.

After the war, wrecked in fortune and broken in health, he again returned to law, practicing principally at this bar.
He entered actively into politics and was elected to the house of delegates.
He afterwards bolted the convention and ran independently for Congress against General Epes Hunton. Culpepper cast for Major Barbour an almost unanimous vote and returned him a majority larger than any other candidate had ever received before or has ever received since.

He was a candidate for lieutenant-governor on the Democratic ticket with Hon. John W. Daniel as candidate for governor. In the Republican victories of that year the ticket was defeated.
The story of that campaign told on him.
He was elected several times after that to the State house of representatives but his health continuing to fail, he had finally, within the past three years, to retire from politics and active public life.

Major Barbour was a most magnetic man and had a wide friendship among the Congressmen and Senators of the country. It is said of him that he never forgot a face. He was about 70 years of age and leaves a wife and seven children.
